When this table is employed to denote amounts above .99% the units must be inferred from the context, condition of the market, etc.; thus Melitinas, if applied to a commodity, the market price of which ranged between $3.00 and $4.00, would mean 3.47% instead of 47%. Users of the code are presumed to be sufficiently familiar with the market to render this method safe under all ordinary circumstances. Should there be any danger of error an additional word must be employed and 3.47% would then be written Melitinas Melitinas.
